A Shared Legacy

Fred has been fishing most of his life, but there were many times he wondered why he still fished and discouraged his son from fishing.

“I was worried that there was no future for the Cape’s small-boat fleet. But fishing was more about who I was than what I did. So, I helped form the Fishermen’s Alliance in 1991.” He continued to work on and off the water with the Fishermen’s Alliance to protect the future of the fleet. Thirty years later, at 84, he still fishes a bit and is proud that two of his grandsons are successful captains with a future on the water.

“That’s why we formed this group, so we and future generations could keep fishing—and that’s why Fishermen’s Alliance is so important.”
